Caring Hands

The issue focuses on the significance of hands in Faroese culture – as a symbol of love, care, and daily work. Hands that guide children, offer comfort, work, and connect generations. This close bond between children and adults is often seen in the works of the Faroese artist, Sigrun Gunnarsdóttir (b. 1950).

Columnar Basalt

Have you ever wondered about a cliff face that looks like long carved columns, as if cut by hand? These columns are called columnar basalt and resemble true works of art, built directly into nature. In the Faroe Islands, there are many fascinating examples of columnar basalts including the beautiful Kulagjógv on Suðuroy.

Telephone Communication

The first telephone line in the Faroe Islands was established in 1905 and ran between Vestmanna and Tórshavn. It was Ólavur á Heygum from Vestmanna who financed and laid the telephone line. As early as 1901, he wrote to the parliament about the importance the telephone could have for Faroese society. In 1906, the Faroese parliament took over the telephone line and founded the public Telephone Company.

The Pixies' Christmas

During the festive season, you might sometimes spot tiny pixie footprints in the snow. And if you are up very early, you could be lucky enough to glimpse a pixie darting under a stone or into a hiding place. But if you are patient and very quiet, you might even see two small pixies sitting on a rock, playing Christmas music outside the house while the children are fast asleep.
